

California Guidelines: Drafting Work Accommodation Notes for Patients with Limitations Related to Pregnancy, Childbirth, Lactation, or a Related Condition

*These guidelines apply only in California.

Visit Pregnant@Work (www.pregnantatwork.org) for other states.

Attached as Appendix A is a sample work note that satisfies all of the requirements of California law for requesting a reasonable accommodation. Appendix B is a sample work note for recommending leave or reduced work schedules.

California law requires employers that have 5 or more employees to provide:

- ❖ Reasonable accommodations, on the advice of a health care professional, to employees affected by pregnancy, childbirth, lactation, or related conditions; and/or
- ❖ Full time leave, intermittent leave, or a reduced work schedule to employees disabled because of pregnancy, childbirth, lactation, or a related medical condition (including women who need time off for prenatal or postnatal care appointments).

Health care providers can play an important role in enabling patients to receive the accommodations they need. In most cases, the goal is to write a note that will assist your patient to receive the accommodation she needs to continue working and earning an income for the family she supports.

Considering leave or a reduced work schedule? Proceed with Caution. Women disabled by pregnancy may take up to four months of disability leave in California (not including the 12 additional weeks of baby bonding time). Working a reduced schedule (e.g., part time work) typically uses up leave on a pro rata basis. Before recommending that your patient take leave or work a reduced schedule, you should discuss with her other accommodations that will allow her to continue working. You and your patient should consider these factors:

- Taking leave will likely reduce her income (note: most women in California are eligible for partial income replacement through the state’s disability insurance program).
- Most employees have limited leave time, and if your patient goes out early in her pregnancy, she may exhaust her leave and may end up being fired because she will be unable to return to work when her leave runs out.
- If your patient is fired for taking or exhausting her pregnancy leave, advise her to call a legal hotline (see numbers below) for information—under certain circumstances, women are entitled to take additional leave when they are pregnant, because leave may be considered a reasonable accommodation.
- Under California law, an employer may not require a pregnant woman to take leave if she is able to continue working with a reasonable accommodation.

*NOTE: If it is necessary to recommend your patient take leave or work a reduced schedule, skip to “Part B: Recommending Leave and Reduced Work Schedules,” page 3 below. If you will recommend that your patient keep working with a reasonable accommodation, continue here with Part A:

Part A: Recommending a Reasonable Accommodation

An effective pregnancy accommodation work note has five components:

- 1. State that your patient is pregnant, has experienced childbirth, is lactating, or has a related medical condition; and that a reasonable accommodation is “medically advisable.” This will trigger California’s legal protections.
- 2. Precisely identify your patient’s known limitation(s). Identify exactly what your patient requires to work safely. Do not impose limitations that are not medically necessary, because if there is no accommodation available, your patient could be sent out on leave.

Examples of specific, clear limitations include:

- Is unable to stand for more than one hour without fifteen minutes of sitting
- Must eat snacks every two or three hours throughout the day
- May not lift more than 50 pounds more than three times per day
- Must consume water approximately every 10 minutes throughout the day
- May not be exposed to [specific toxin]
- May not be put at risk of being kicked in the stomach
- May not climb ladders

CAUTION: Avoid recommending limitations that are too vague or overly broad. For example, DO NOT recommend:

- “Light duty.” Instead, specify the maximum number of pounds the patient can safely lift, that she can only be on her feet X amount without a rest break, etc.
- “No stress.” This typically will cause a patient to lose her job. What employer can guarantee a stress-free job?
- “No physical activity.” Be more specific; few jobs require no physical activity at all.

- 3. Affirmatively state that your patient is able to continue working with a reasonable accommodation.
- 4. Recommend reasonable accommodation(s). A reasonable accommodation is a reasonable change in the workplace that would accommodate a pregnant woman by enabling her to safely perform her job.

Be as specific as possible in recommending an accommodation.

Examples of reasonable accommodations include:

- Modifying work practices, policies, or duties
- Modifying work schedules to permit earlier or later hours
Examples continue on following page.

- Allowing more frequent or longer breaks (e.g., to use the restroom or eat a snack)
- Acquisition of equipment for sitting
- Periodic rest
- Assistance with manual labor (including acquiring lifting devices)
- Temporary transfers to less strenuous or hazardous positions, if available
- Break time and appropriate facilities for pumping breast milk

*Appendix C to this document is a chart of typical pregnancy-related conditions and accommodations that may be appropriate in addressing them.

- 5. Provide the date when the accommodation became medically advisable and its expected duration. Say, for example, that the limitation began on the date of the letter and is expected to last for the duration of your patient’s pregnancy, until she gives birth on her approximate due date. If the end date of the accommodation is uncertain, you may list a date by which you will reevaluate your patient – the date can be extended or changed in the future.

Does the patient have to reveal her pregnancy-related medical condition? No. You must state your patient is pregnant or has given birth, but California law does not require providers to identify medical conditions like gestational diabetes or morning sickness. Because patients may want to keep their medical condition private from their employers, it is recommended that you state only the information above.

*See Appendix A for a sample work note seeking a reasonable accommodation.

Part B: Recommending Leave or Reduced Work Schedules

*See Appendix B for a sample work note recommending disability leave, reduced schedule, or leave for medical appointments.

If your patient is disabled<sup>1</sup> by pregnancy, she may take up to four months of full time leave, intermittent leave, or a reduced work schedule. Intermittent leave and reduced work schedules use up leave on a pro rata basis. Before recommending leave or a reduced work schedule, consider other options that will allow your patient to continue working (see the warning about recommending leave, on page 1 above).

<sup>1</sup> A woman is “disabled by pregnancy” if she is unable to perform one or more of her primary job duties, or unable to perform them without undue risk to herself, to her pregnancy’s successful completion, or to other persons. A woman is considered disabled by pregnancy if she is suffering from severe morning sickness or you believe she needs to take time off for: prenatal or postnatal care; bed rest; gestational diabetes; pregnancy-induced hypertension; preeclampsia; post-partum depression; childbirth; or recovery from childbirth, or loss or end of pregnancy. This list is illustrative and non-exhaustive.

A work note recommending leave or reduced schedule should state:

1. That the patient is disabled due to pregnancy, childbirth, lactation, or a related medical condition.
2. That the patient requires full-time leave, a reduced work schedule, or leave for medical appointments. If your patient is able to continue working, affirmatively say so in the note.
3. When the patient became disabled and the anticipated schedule for the leave or reduced schedule. If you say nothing at all about when a patient on leave can return to work, she may end up losing her job as a result.

* You are not required to reveal your patient's pregnancy-related medical condition, so long as you state that she is disabled by pregnancy or childbirth or a related condition.
