Hawaii Guidelines: Drafting Work Accommodation Notes for Patients with Limitations Related to Pregnancy, Childbirth, or a Related Condition

*These guidelines are applicable only in Hawaii. Visit Pregnant@Work (www.pregnantatwork.org) for other states.

Attached as Appendix A is a sample work note that maximizes the likelihood that your patient will receive the accommodation she needs to continue working.

Hawaii law requires employers to provide women affected by disability due to pregnancy, childbirth, or related conditions (e.g., lactation):

- Reasonable accommodations; and/or
- Leave for a reasonable period of time (what’s “reasonable” is determined by a physician)

Federal and state law may provide additional protections to women who are not disabled by pregnancy, but who require accommodations for preventive care reasons.

Health care providers can play an important role in enabling patients to receive the accommodations they need to keep their jobs. In most cases, the goal is to write a note that will assist your patient to receive the accommodation she needs to continue working and earning an income for the family she supports. Before you recommend that a patient take leave, see “Recommending Leave? Proceed with Caution,” under #6 below.

An effective pregnancy accommodation work note includes seven components:

1. State that your patient is pregnant. This triggers the protections of the federal and state laws that may require your patient’s employer to accommodate her.

   What if my patient does not want to reveal her pregnancy to her employer? That is her choice, but she may be less likely to receive the accommodation she needs.

2. Identify your patient’s medical condition(s) and the bodily system(s) impaired. Identifying this information in the note will demonstrate to your patient’s employer that she has an impairment that constitutes a disability, and therefore is entitled to an accommodation under federal and state law.

   See Appendix C for a list of medical conditions commonly associated with pregnancy. Examples include:
   - Gestational Diabetes, an impairment of the endocrine system
   - Sciatica/severe back pain, an impairment of the musculoskeletal system
   - Migraine headaches, an impairment of the cardiovascular and nervous systems
   - Recurrent urinary tract infections, an impairment of the genitourinary system

   Tip: It is useful to identify a specific medical diagnosis and the bodily system it impairs, if possible. For example, state that your patient has been diagnosed with “hyperemesis gravidarum, an impairment of the digestive and reproductive systems,” instead of simply saying she has “morning sickness.”
What if my patient does not have an identifiable medical condition or does not want to disclose it for privacy reasons? If your patient does not provide documentation to her employer that she has a specific impairment, she may not be entitled to an accommodation under the Americans with Disabilities Act or Hawaii’s pregnancy accommodation law—although she may be entitled to an accommodation under another law or her employer’s policies. You will increase the likelihood that your patient will receive an accommodation by identifying an existing medical condition in your note. If this is not possible, skip this step and step #3, and continue to #4 below. A sample work note that does not disclose any medical condition is attached as Appendix B.

3. Identify major life activities that are substantially limited by your patient’s medical condition. This will demonstrate for the employer that your patient has an impairment covered by federal and state accommodation laws. Include this component in the note only if you have identified a medical condition (#2 above).

E.g., You may write: “XYZ medical condition substantially limits patient’s ability to [eat, sleep, bend, reach, stand, walk, lift, communicate, concentrate, think, perform manual tasks, care for herself, work, or any other life activity impaired].”

FYI: “Substantially limits” means substantially limits as compared to the rest of the general population, before any ameliorative actions have been taken to treat the condition. Under the law, “substantially limits” is construed broadly.

4. Precisely identify your patient’s known limitation(s). Identify exactly what your patient requires to work safely. Do not impose limitations that are not medically necessary, because if there is no accommodation available, your patient could be sent out on leave.

Examples of specific, clear limitations include:

- Is unable to stand for more than one hour without fifteen minutes of sitting
- Must eat snacks every two or three hours throughout the day
- May not lift more than 50 pounds more than three times per day
- May not consume water approximately every 10 minutes throughout the day
- May not be exposed to [specific toxin]
- May not be put at risk of being kicked in the stomach
- May not climb ladders

CAUTION: Avoid recommending limitations that are too vague or overly broad. For example, DO NOT recommend:

- “Light duty.” Instead, specify the maximum number of pounds the patient can safely lift, that she can only be on her feet X amount without a rest break, etc.
- “No stress.” This typically will cause a patient to lose her job. What employer can guarantee a stress-free job?
- “No physical activity.” Be more specific; few jobs require no physical activity at all.
5. Affirmatively state that your patient is able to continue working with a reasonable accommodation. Omit this step if you recommend full-time leave.

6. Recommend reasonable accommodation(s). A reasonable accommodation is any change in the work environment or in the way a job is customarily done that would enable the pregnant employee to satisfactorily perform the essential duties of her job, without imposing an undue difficulty or expense on her employer. Speak with your patient about what may be possible at her workplace.

   - Recommending Leave? Proceed with Caution. Before recommending that your patient take leave, you should discuss with her other accommodations that will allow her to continue working. Hawaii law requires employers to give women disabled by pregnancy leave from work for a “reasonable period of time.” What is reasonable is determined by the woman’s physician, who must take into account the employee’s physical condition and the job requirements. Before deciding on leave, you and your patient should consider:

     o Taking Leave Will Likely Affect Your Patient’s Income – although she may be eligible for partial income replacement through Hawaii’s temporary disability benefits program o The requirement that employers provide leave for a “reasonable period of time” applies only to women who are disabled by pregnancy. Non-disabled women may be entitled to leave under other laws or employer policies, but such leave is usually limited. If it runs out before your patient is ready to come back to work, she may lose her job as a result.

   ➢ If your patient is fired for asking for or taking pregnancy leave, advise her to call WorkLife Law’s legal hotline (see number below) for information.

Appendix C to this document is a chart of typical pregnancy-related conditions and accommodations that may be appropriate in addressing them.

Examples of reasonable accommodations include:

- Acquisition of equipment for sitting
- More frequent or longer breaks
- Ability to periodically eat or drink water
- Periodic rest
- Time off for medical appointments
- Assistance with lifting or other manual labor
- Temporarily modified work duties
- Modified work schedules or telecommuting
7. Provide expected duration of impairment and limitation. Inform the employer how long you expect the limitation to last. Say, for example, that the limitation began on the date of the letter and is expected to last for the duration of your patient’s pregnancy, until she gives birth on her approximate due date. If the end date of the accommodation is uncertain, you may list a date by which you will have reevaluated your patient – the date can be extended or changed in the future.

    When Recommending Leave: State the estimated commencement and termination dates of the leave, and that the leave duration is “reasonable, based on the patient’s physical condition and job requirements.” If you say nothing at all about when a patient on leave can return to work, she may end up losing her job as a result.
